

“Make it a great 2012”

One of the desperately difficult concepts for me is to know that I am in charge of my attitude. Coming from a long history of harboring the "princess complex" (you all might know what that is.... its the feeling that I should have all the money, all the beauty, all the privileges, all the rights that go along with royalty - without any of the pain, misery, cincerella-work, and frustration that accompany being a plain ordinary person). I wonder if my feelings are unique, or whether they have biological (neuroanatomical) roots that might be valuable in overall survival and progression of the species. It seems intuitive that it would be beneficial but all the teachings of the great philosophers indicate that the princess complex does not give us happiness in the long run, but quite the opposite. The paradox of giving to receive, loving to be loved, working to feel rested, would fly in the face of the princess complex. So maybe this is a year that I resolve (get it ha ha!.... new years resolution---and we all know resolutions are tough to keep) to use the ol' brain to override my feelings of "I deserve" and "I am worth it" and replace them with feelings of we are all valuable in the "kingdom of the eternal" and extend my hands to help more in 2012 and see if my year is not "happier" and more "joyful"

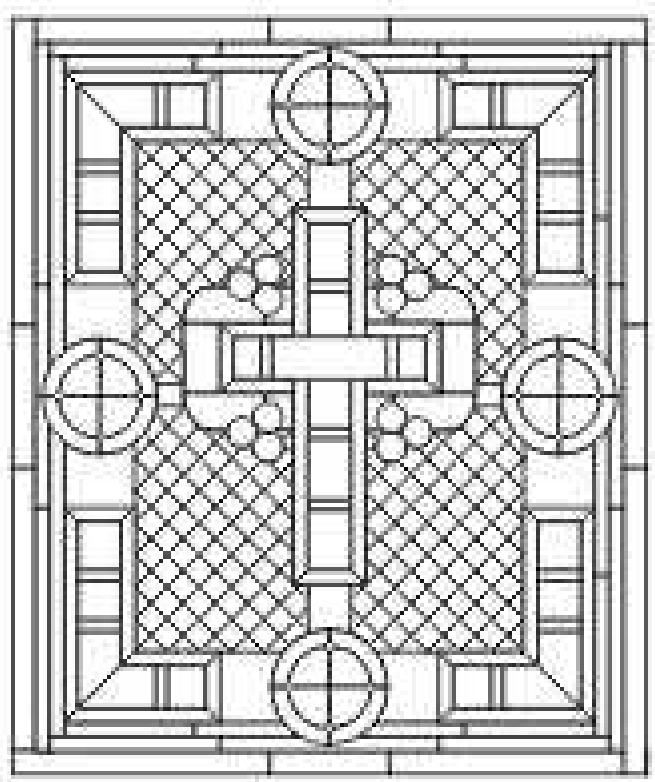

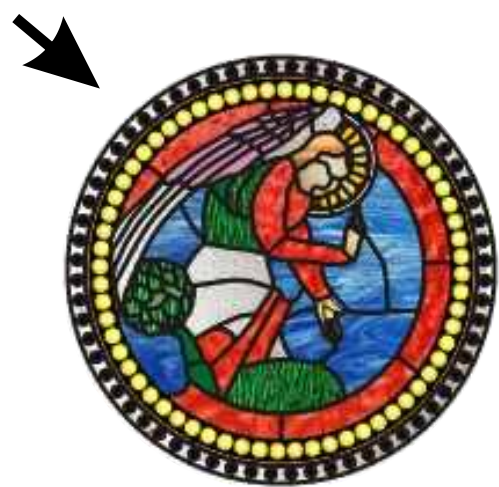

Best to you all, and thank you for your visits to the website.

Daily calendar sayings for January 2012 "Seeking"

"Seeking" was a thought I had about charging into the new year, keeping my eyes open and aware of the many places that I might try to make my world a better place to be, trying also not to leave behind any "messes" or a "dry" planet after consuming more than a reasonable amount of resources. Its a funny "bug" I caught, that of being ultra conservative, seeking all kinds of ways to minimize. What I need to maximize however, is my seeking for whatever eternal and awesome power is available to me to use and to share.

	seek the Lord almighty
	earnestly seek Me
	seek My face
	continually seek Him
	seek His face always
	..came to seek and save
